

E8 Resistance fighters

When war broke out in 1939, Josef Horvath was working with numerous Austrians at an airport in Germany. In 1940, he was called up to the Wehrmacht in Bremen. When he realised on home leave in Burgenland that his family had been deported, he deserted to France and eventually joined the French Foreign Legion. In 1945, he returned to Austria as a soldier with the French troops who were now involved in the fighting. Josef Horvath is the only Austrian Roma known to date to have actively fought for the liberation of Austria on the side of the Allies with a weapon in his hand.

💡 Did you know

... that defectors were often suspected of being spies who had been tasked with infiltrating the enemy's troops?

...that for many decades, deserters were not recognised as resistance fighters, nor as victims of National Socialist persecution?

✎ Your task

Find out whether there are any memorials to resistance fighters in your neighbourhood. Think about why it is important to remember resistance against the Nazi regime.

📷 About the photo

Josef Horvath as a pensioner in Vienna. Photo held in private possession. Johann Balogh: Althodis/Stari Hodas, Eisenstadt 1992.

<https://romasintigenocide.eu/en/e>

1910

1951

1939-45